acts as the deputy to the TPM (Train Performance Manager), supporting the application of the Configuration Baseline Missions & Trade Off processes on a day-to-day basis.

Maintains traceability from source requirements to supplier requirements (TPS) and the layers in between.

The Requirement Management Engineer (RME) Role is a project related role, the RME is assigned to 1 or multiple projects according to the complexity and the phase of the project.

Complex projects can require multiple RME, in that case:

- 1 RME is defined as the Main RME and is responsible to the governance and coordination, the others supporting RME will perform the day-to-day activities in interaction with the Engineers but will report directly to the Main RME

- In case of multiple RME on the project, the Main RME will be reporting to Train System (TS) organization, the other RME could be reporting to Train design (TD) or other organization (TS, TC…).

- Even if each RME belong to a specific organization, the RME has a transversal role, which means that he will not limit his activities to the organisation he belongs to but will support the project globally according to his scope of responsibility.

- Only the Main RME is reporting to TPM & CoD, in case of absence of the Main RME, 1 supporting RME will take over the governance activities.
